RESTIGOUCHE, an extensive county in the north of New Brunswick, bordering on Baie des Chaleurs. The surface is extremely diversified with mountains and valleys, and is intersected by numerous rivers. The soil is fertile and heavily timbered. Large quantities of timber are annually exported from Dalhousie, the chief town. Area, 2,092,595 acres. Pop. of co. (1901), 10,586.

RESTIGOUCHE (which means "the river which divides like the hand," in allusion to its separating at the head of tide into five principal streams or branches), a river of New Brunswick, forms the north boundary of the province on the north-west, separating it from the province of Quebec. From the head of tide to its extreme source near Lake Temiscouata, the distance is 200 miles, and the main river, with its tributaries, drains an area of about 5,000 square miles of fertile and well timbered country. The five leading branches vary from 50 to 70 miles in length, and are known by the novel names of Matapedia, or Musical River; Upsalquitch, or Blanket River; Wetomkegewick, or Large River; Mistouche, or Little River, and Waagan, or Knife River. The entrance to the Restigouche from the Baie des Chaleurs is 3 miles wide and 9 fathoms deep. The tide flows up it 24 miles, of which 18 are navigable for the largest ships. The principal towns on its banks are Dalhousie, at its mouth, and Campbellton, at the head of navigation. The scenery in its course is everywhere both grand and beautiful, but that portion is the most interesting where it forces its way through the mountain lands which give birth to the great streams of New Brunswick, and those of the United States emptying into the Atlantic Ocean. Here "the eagle, unmolested, builds its nest upon high cliffs; the bear and black cat secrete themselves in caves and rocky fissures; the moose and caribou 'brouse' upon their favorite food; and the salmon, fearless and free, reflect the sunshine in the deepest and darkest pools." The Restigouche is one of the finest salmon rivers in the world. On the Upsalquitch, also, rare salmon-fishing may be enjoyed. Fish-breeding operations are carried on by the Government on the Restigouche, opposite the mouth of Matapedia River.

ROCKY MOUNTAINS, called also CHIPPEWAYAN MOUNTAINS, a chain in the central and west part of North America; commencing in New Mexico, in about 32° 30' N. lat., near Fort Webster, it extends nearly north north-west, throughout the north portion of the continent and the Polar Ocean, terminating west of the mouth of the Mackenzie River, in lat. 69° N., lon. 135° W. This range, in connection with the Andes, of which it may be said to be a continuation, forms the longest, and, according to Humboldt, the most uniform chain of mountains on the globe. Somewhat more than half of the entire chain belongs to North America, the name, Rocky Mountains, being usually applied to that portion only which is comprised within the United States and the Dominion of Canada, although the exact limit of this mountain range towards the south can scarcely be said to be determined. The entire length of the chain, following the windings, may be stated in round numbers at 3,000 miles. The east boundary of the Rocky Mountains in lat. 36° N., is in 70° 20' W. lon.; in lat. 40° N., 108° 30' W. lon.; in lat. 65° N., 124° 40' W. lon.; in lat. 68° N., 130° 30' W. lon. Notwithstanding this general tending to the west, the continent widens so much more in the same direction that this chain, which, in South and Central America, and Mexico, is comparatively a coast range, is several hundred leagues inland in the United States and Canada. The highest known peaks within the United States are Fremont's, 13,570 feet, and Pike's Peak, 11,497 feet high; and Mount Brown and Mount Hooker, in Canada, near 53° N. lat., the former about 16,000 and the latter 15,690 feet above the sea level. Other notable elevations of the region are Mounts Murchison, Stepen, McDougall, Sir Donald, Mount Lyall, Mount Baker, besides numberless peaks occurring in the Sierra, Gold, Purcell, Selkirk and other ranges. We are very imperfectly acquainted with this system of mountains; the general altitude of the range, however, is supposed to vary from 10,000 to 14,000 feet; it is said that peaks have been measured of 18,000 feet in elevation. Probably no mountains of the same altitude can be so readily traversed as the Rocky Mountain chain, owing to the great breadth of its base and its gentle acclivity. Among the most remarkable of the numerous passes may be mentioned that leading from the head waters of the Athabasca to those of the Columbia between Mount Brown and Mount Hooker, and called the Athabasca Portage; it has a height of 7,300 feet, and has only been used by the traders of the Hudson Bay Company as the principal pass into the basin of Columbia. The following are the measurements of 8 other passes in the Dominion of Canada:

1. Red Stone Creek or Boundary Pass from Waterton River to the Kootenay, 6,030 feet above the sea.
2. British Kootenay Pass, by Ramsay River to the Kootenay. 5,960 feet.
3. Crow's Nest Pass, by Crow River to the Kootenay.
4. Kananaski Pass, from Fort Bow by Ramsay River to the Kootenay (with a short tunnel 4,600 feet). 5,985 feet.
5. Vermillion Pass, from the South Saskatchewan by Fort Bow (4,110 feet) to the Kootenay. 4,947 feet.
6. Kicking Horse Pass, by Bow River and Kicking Horse River to the Upper Columbia. 5,420 feet.
7. Howe Pass, from Deer River by Blueberry River to the Upper Columbia. 6,347 feet.
8. Tete Jaune or Yellowhead Pass, from the Athabaska to the Upper Fraser, 3,760 feet.

The principal pass on United States territory is the South Pass, in about lat. $42^{\circ} 30'$ N., and lon. $109^{\circ} 30'$ W. Its elevation is about 7,500 feet above the sea. The Union Pacific Railroad crosses the Rocky Mountains near the sources of the Missouri and Columbia at an elevation of about 6,000 feet above the sea. Amid the valleys and forges of this stupendous system of mountains, some of the largest rivers of the globe have their birth. Of these, the Athabasca, Peace and Mackenzie find their outlet in the Polar Sea; the Saskatchewan in the Atlantic, through Hudson Bay; the Missouri and its tributaries find an exit in the Mississippi; while the Rio del Norte, the Colorado and the Columbia take opposite directions, the first through the valley of New Mexico to the Gulf of Mexico; the second through the deserts of Utah to the Gulf of California; while the last, from the north, bursting through the Cascade and coast ranges, rushes to join the mighty Pacific, bearing the only water that reaches that Ocean directly from this range. Of the geological structure of the Rocky Mountains little is as yet known. Volcanic rocks are known to exist in many places on the slopes or sides. According to the most recent reports there is, between the heads of Madison River and the upper waters of the Yellowstone a volcanic region of perhaps 100 square miles in extent. Hot springs are found not only in this region, but in various other places on the east and west declivities of the Rocky Mountain range. Near $42^{\circ} 37'$ N. lat., and $110^{\circ} 45'$ W. lon., there are a number of fountains, the waters of which effervesce with the carbonic acid that they contain. From this circumstance they have received the name of "Beer, or Soda Springs." The most remarkable of these throw up a jet d'eau about three feet in height, accompanied with a subterranean noise, which, together with the rushing of the water resembles the sound of a steamboat in motion, whence it has been termed the "Steamboat Spring." Inexhaustible coal fields skirt the Rocky Mountains through twelve degrees of latitude, chiefly in British territory. The route of the Canadian Pacific Railway runs through this coal district and crosses the Rocky Mountains by the Yellow-head Pass. After leaving Calgary, the line goes by way of Canmore (altitude of station 4,355 feet), in view of the Three Sisters peaks, on to Banff, the seat of Hot Springs and of the Canadian National Park, a forest reservation 25 miles long by 10 miles in width. At Banff is the Canadian Pacific Hotel, close to the Bow River Falls, and in view of Mount Rundle and Sulphur Mountain. Entering the Kicking Horse Pass, the line reaches Stephen Station, in view of Mount Stephen, "the central spire of the Rockies." Soon we reach the summit or divide in the range and pass by way of Field and Donald to Glacier and "The Loop," in the vicinity of the Columbia and Kootenay Rivers, thence across the Selkirk range, through the Albert Canyon to the mining town of Revelstoke. From Sicamous, close by Shuswap Lake, the road runs alongside the Thompson River to Kamloops, thence on to North Bend, a divisional railway point, on the Fraser River. Following the canyon of the Fraser River, the scenery along which is described as "matchless, for 23 miles, we come to Yale, which is the head of navigation; on the Fraser River, 103 miles from Yale brings us to the Pacific Coast terminus—Vancouver, whence there is regular steamer service to Vancouver Island and the various ports along the Northern British Columbia coast, also to Japan, China and Australia. From Mission Junction, 42 miles east of Vancouver, a branch line extends 10 miles to Sumas, on the U. S. border, where connection is made with the United States railway lines for Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, Ore; San Francisco, etc., and from Westminster Junction, 17 miles east of Vancouver, another branch line runs to Westminster, a distance of 9 miles.
